Right as a Rabbit

CARLO the Coyote, like all creatures of his kind, was hungry, crafty and merciless. He had rigged a trap to bring easy prey to his jaws. In the underbrush he fashioned a narrow tunnel, with woven sticks and twigs at either side to keep anyone from breaking away, and at the entrance placed a small carrot. Midway along the tunnel he placed a larger carrot, and finally set the biggest carrot of all where the tunnel entered his den at the center of the brush clump. Carlo had a whole basketful of carrots to use for bait, enough for days and days.

Waiting idly, he heard soft footsteps in the tunnel. He pulled himself together, grinning hungrily. Something was approaching. It paused over the medium-sized carrot at the midway point, then came into the open space and seized the big carrot. It was a rabbit, plump, fluffy and appetizing.

Carlo moved to cut off the one way of retreat, and cleared his throat. "Good evening," he said hoarsely.

The rabbit glanced up and saw him. "Oh," said the rabbit. "Good evening. My name's Roy Rabbit, and I—"

"I'm Carlo," said the coyote, "and I suppose you know what's going to happen now?"

"Of course," said Roy good-humoredly. "You are going to eat me, aren't you? That's really why I came here, not because of your carrots. They're fairly obvious lures for the unwary."

This amazing statement made Carlo almost forget his appetite, but not completely. "What do you mean, you came here to be eaten? Why do you want me to eat you?"

"Because I've filled myself as full of poison as a drug store," said Roy. "Enough to poison a dozen coyotes. Begin eating, Carlo."

Carlo threw back his wicked head and laughed loud, long and evilly. He was proud of his evil laugh. "A likely story, indeed!" he cried. "You're just saying that in the hope that I won't eat you."

"Why, yes," agreed Roy. "It was a silly subterfuge, now that you mention it. Of course I don't have poison in me. Just good, healthy rabbit meat. Well, go ahead. That's what you've been waiting for, isn't it? A nice pleasant rabbit dinner? Where do you think you'll bite me first?"

Carlo had his white-fanged mouth open for that first bite, but he closed it again, empty. He crinkled his brow almost plaintively. "I don't get it," he said. "Rabbits usually beg not to be eaten. They plead and argue and offer bribes, but I go ahead and eat them anyway."

"Except in my case," said Roy Rabbit. "You seem to be suspicious of me. I'm just a little bit angry with you, Carlo."

"Look," snarled the coyote, "I've had enough of this. Go away. Let me alone."

"Not me. I'm staying here." Roy sat down.

"You'll go, or I'll kick you out!" yelled Carlo.

"I don't believe you're coyote enough," said Roy.

Carlo sprang at the rabbit, seizing him by the back of the neck. But then Carlo shuddered, stiffened, every hair on end and smoke curling out of his ears. He tried to howl, could not, and collapsed, unconscious from a terrible electric shock.

The rabbits who had been listening outside thronged in, helping themselves to the store of carrots Carlo had provided for bait. The oldest rabbit spoke to his next oldest colleague.

"What do you think of my electrified robot rabbit now?" he asked. "Look at him!" He waved toward Roy. "He moves, speaks and otherwise makes off like a real rabbit, by my remote control set outside the tunnel."

"He's a marvel," agreed the next oldest rabbit, studying the triumph of engineering that was Roy. "A masterpiece of a robot rabbit. That's kind of hard to say, isn't it—robot rabbit? But I don't understand why you carried on all that radio-conveyed debate with Carlo the Coyote. Carlo was bound to be knocked stiff the first moment he touched the robot."

"Of course," smiled the oldest rabbit, "but I couldn't resist the chance to have a little fun. I wanted to make a real occasion of it. After this, every time Carlo catches a rabbit, all the rabbit has to say is that his name is Roy. And Carlo will let him go."

Laden with carrots, the rabbits departed from Carlo's den. Powered by the remote controls from outside, Roy, the robot rabbit, followed them.
